A Knife Found That Probably Killed Gress at Maspeth.

Coroner's Physician Discards the Theory of Sulcide,

The mystery surrounding the death of Kari Gross, of 161 Varet street, Brooklyn, whose body was found in a clump of bushes near the old South Side Railroad at Maspeth, L. L., Wednesday afternoon is still unsolved.

Coroner's Physician Vincent E. Judson, of Maspeth, this morning performed an autopsy on the body at the Ridgewood Morgue, and his discoveries indicate that the man was

KNIFE FOUND NEAR THE BODY.

The knife, which is supposed to have caused the fatal wound, was yesterday found by a WORLD reporter imbedded in the earth only a few feet away from the spot where the unfortunate man's body was found. It is a coarse, bone-handled affair, somewhat similar to those commonly used by sailers, and might easily have fitted the wound which caused Gross's death. At the conclusion of the autoper Dr. Judson "The knife wound in the centre of the body
